Report

The speaker commenced the session by interacting with the students about what they think a startup is. He emphasized how one should choose personal growth and how the emotional journey is necessary. What this essentially meant is that your ideas, thoughts, and impact matter.

The individual speaking outlined the characteristics of an applicant for a startup, citing Apple founder Steve Jobs as an example.

He proceeded by discussing unicorns and Indian startup culture. Then he talked about the advantages of joining a business and his experience at Ditto, which at the time had just twenty to twenty-five advisors. Then, using real-world examples, he described how ESOPS operates and its capabilities. Then, just before the debate came to a close, he displayed a flowchart that described the characteristics and interests of a person and which one they should pursue as a career, a startup or a corporate setting.

The session concluded with a Q&A segment, where students had the opportunity to ask questions and clear the doubts they have had about corporate and startup.
