“A Constitution like a machine is a lifeless thing. It acquires life because of the men [people] who control it and operate it and India needs today nothing more than a set of honest men [people] who will have the interest of the country before them.”

- Dr. Rajendra Prasad, in his Valedictory address to the Constituent Assembly on 26th November 1949.

Preamble

The Staff Council at University of Delhi’s Colleges constitutes an integral and indispensable part of its institutional life. As provided in the University Calendar, the Staff Council is a statutory body with well-defined powers, functions, and areas of jurisdiction, mandatory and directive, as well as advisory/recommendatory. When the body's participatory and consultative mechanisms are fully and systematically in place, the institution stands to benefit from the resultant accessing of collective rationality and wisdom.

For the same reason, the Staff Council needs to safeguard its invaluable collective culture. Teachers evidently cannot be content to serve as mere disenfranchised functionaries. They, by definition, are intellect workers and must quite naturally expect to have a say in deciding the shape of academic and institutional processes in their place of work. One assured way of strengthening participatory and democratic decision-making in these areas to the benefit of all concerned is to guarantee that Council Committees and their various constituents, be constituted by a properly standardised electoral process that would effectively and authentically represent the collective will of the Council’s majority.

With this objective, the Review Committee¹ constituted for this purpose submits the following new guidelines on Staff Council posts and systematic electoral reforms (i.e. Staff Council Constitution). The new guidelines must be read along with the provisions of Clause 6-A, 6-B and 6-C of Ordinance XVIII of University of Delhi that provides for Staff Council Committees in Colleges. The new guidelines shall come into effect from the day they are notified jointly by the Principal and Secretary.
